

The Denver Foundation

Case Study | June 2022

CFLeads | Community Foundations
Leading Change

The Denver Foundation centers racial equity as its guiding principle and aims to create a racially equitable Metro Denver in terms of leadership, prosperity, and culture. Programmatically, the Foundation has prioritized community-led grantmaking, specifically supporting Black, Indigenous or People of Color (BIPOC) -led organizations and simplifying the grant application process. Internally, the Foundation has made changes to attract a more diverse staff, such as removing educational requirements and including salaries in job postings. Racial equity is deeply embedded in the Foundation’s culture, with staff being evaluated on their contributions to racial equity and engaging in organization-wide learning initiatives.

Table of Contents

Introduction	2
DENVER CASE STUDY:
The Equity Journey	4
Mission and Vision.....	5
Programs and Activities	6
Organization and Operations	7
Culture	7
Endnotes	8

700,000

Denver is the capital of Colorado and the state's most populous city, with a 2022 population of over 700,000.

29% Hispanic or Latino
9% Black or African American
4% Asian
< 1% American Indian or Alaskan Native¹

Denver is a growing economic hub, with higher job growth than the country overall. There are ten Fortune 500 companies in Colorado and all of them are based in Denver.²

Introduction

For almost 100 years, Denver residents have trusted The Denver Foundation to steward charitable funds to meet today's needs and tomorrow's opportunities. As a tax-exempt, nonprofit, philanthropic organization, The Denver Foundation stewards more than 1,000 funds established by engaged philanthropists. In partnership with the foundation, our donors make gifts to organizations throughout the seven-county Metro Denver region, across Colorado, and beyond.

The Denver Foundation

The Mile High City is also known for its numerous outdoor recreation attractions.

While Denver is in many ways a prosperous city, significant disparities persist in outcomes between racial groups.³

Recent studies have shown that older residents who are not White reported worse health outcomes. Residents of color are more likely to have lower incomes than White residents; people in Colorado with incomes equal to or below the Federal Poverty Level are three times as prone to indicating fair or poor health.⁴

The Equity Journey

The Denver Foundation has prided itself on being a leader in racial diversity and inclusion for 25 years, especially when it comes to diversity of staff, board, and grantees. Four years ago, TDF shifted to an “equity” focus, recognizing that diversity and inclusion were not the only aspects of the work required. The Foundation’s equity focus has grown in subsequent years, culminating in its most recent strategic plan (2021), which centers racial equity as the organization’s North Star.

“Culture and strategy live together in this journey; you can’t have one without the other.”

Charmaine Brown
*Senior Scholarship Officer,
The Denver Foundation*

Mission and Vision

Prior to the 2021 strategic plan, The Denver Foundation’s vision was of a Metro Denver where “all residents” have the opportunity for a high quality of life. While this vision implied a desire for equity, it did not explicitly call it out. To inform its next ten-year strategic plan, TDF collected perspectives from 8,000 community members. This data, in combination with TDF’s ongoing internal conversations about race, led the board to focus its new ten-year strategic framework (2021-2031) on racial equity, with the vision of “A Metro Denver that is racially equitable in its leadership, prosperity, and culture.” Relatedly, TDF now defines its purpose as “[being] a proactive, collaborative, and resolute leader in reducing racial disparities.” “This was a significant jump for us,” Chief Impact Officer Dace West said, “to decide to really put equity, and explicitly racial equity, into the core of our vision statement.”

Programs and Activities

With a mission and vision centered on racial equity, The Denver Foundation shifted its programmatic focus towards community-led grantmaking, which prioritized BIPOC-led organizations; simplified the grant application and reporting process; and increased the average size of TDF grants. This work was already underway before the 2021 strategic plan; between 2011-2021, the percentage of grant funds distributed to BIPOC-led organizations increased from 26 percent to 48 percent. As one example of its equity-focused grantmaking, in June 2020 TDF created the Black Resilience in Colorado Fund, which will distribute $1 million in grants in its first year. The Fund focuses its support on Black-led and Black-serving organizations working to dismantle systemic racism.

Organization and Operations

In service of its equity vision, The Denver Foundation has made several significant changes to its internal organization and operations. In an effort to attract a more diverse staff and ensure an equitable hiring process, TDF removed educational requirements for candidates and began including salaries in job postings. “This was something that was really intentional across the organization,” said Chief Impact Officer Dace West. “We asked ourselves what was getting in the way of a more diverse set of candidates applying for our jobs.” Since making these changes, TDF has seen its share of BIPOC staff grow (from 39 percent in 2019 to 47 percent in 2021), which has contributed to the organization’s efficacy and impact.

“A variety of lived experiences brings a different richness to the work,” West said. “There’s a broader range of experiences reflected on our team, which makes us more dynamic.”

In 2020, TDF also merged two of its major departments: philanthropic services and programs. This has helped remove silos within the organization and integrate fundraising with community grantmaking. The shift has been positively received by staff, donors, and non-profit grantees alike, all of whom see value in the unified approach. “The new structure allows us to speak with one voice and deliver the same message to all audiences,” said Senior Scholarship Officer Charmaine Brown.

Culture

The Denver Foundation has taken distinct steps to embed racial equity in its organizational culture. “Culture and strategy live together in this journey,” said Charmaine Brown. “You can’t have one without the other.” Racial equity has become a “critical competency” at the Foundation, and will be part of performance management for all staff. As such, TDF will evaluate all staff on their contributions to racial equity, as it would on other key dimensions of their work (such as management). This has allowed the organization to clearly communicate its expectations, and to embed racial equity into professional development. “It’s not that you need to be a full-on racial equity expert when you walk through the door, but you have to be willing to go on the journey with us,” said Brown. “To bring staff together while learning, TDF created an organization-wide book club with a racial equity focus; their first book was Isabel Wilkerson’s book Caste: The Origins of Our Discontents.”

Endnotes

- 1 United States Census Bureau
- 2 U.S. News
- 3 Colorado, Mount Evans
- 4 Colorado Health Institute, "Racial and Ethnic Health Disparities Lead to Worse Health Outcomes Among Colorado's Aging Population." April 2021, updated May 2023

CFLeads

Community Foundations
Leading Change

info@cfleads.org
www.cfleads.org